RESEARCH:

My research is grouped below by publications and presentations in four overlapping areas.

I. Historical legacies and inheritance of the past in Germany: My book Between Sovereignty and Integration explores how united German foreign policy in the early 1990s coalesced around competing national narratives of “normalcy” and “responsibility” in the search to manage the constraints of the militarist past. Current work examines the united German inheritance of the East German socialist legacy, especially the struggle over representations of the socialist everyday into a new national narrative.

II. Social and organizational adaptation in post-socialism: My work here examines innovative adaptations in the transition from socialist to market economy. Together with David Stark I explored how non-governmental organizations in East Central Europe co-evolved with the use of digital technologies. Current work looks at the Special Economic Zone of Shenzhen, China, and the process by which former collective farms become “urban villages” that exploit ambiguities at the intersection of socialist values and market practices.

III. Spaces of exception—territorial and political reconfigurations: This work addresses the fundamental tension in globalization between de-territorialization and renewed forms of state intervention. I explore state responses to globalization through two projects that examine exceptional spaces. The first examines economic zones as territorial anomalies and new urban spaces where sovereignty and citizenship are renegotiated. The second explores how transnational migrants shape new articulations of belonging and political membership through their claims on the political process of their home countries.

IV. Other research: This includes work on political theory, globalization and democracy, transatlantic foreign and security policy, and the organization of academic events.

I. HISTORICAL LEGACIES AND INHERITANCE OF THE PAST
